

relationship and professional ethics. The contract model of medicine, such as the Hippocratic Oath, emphasizes the physician's duty to the patient and the community. This model is based on the idea of a social contract between the physician and the patient, where the physician agrees to provide care in exchange for the patient's trust and payment. This model is often contrasted with the utilitarian model, which focuses on the overall good of the community.

Utilitarianism is a moral philosophy that focuses on the overall good of the community. It is based on the idea that the right action is the one that produces the greatest good for the greatest number of people. In the context of medicine, utilitarianism would suggest that a physician should act in a way that maximizes the overall health and well-being of the community, even if it means sacrificing the interests of individual patients. This model is often contrasted with the contract model, which focuses on the relationship between the physician and the patient.

Utilitarianism is a moral philosophy that focuses on the overall good of the community. It is based on the idea that the right action is the one that produces the greatest good for the greatest number of people. In the context of medicine, utilitarianism would suggest that a physician should act in a way that maximizes the overall health and well-being of the community, even if it means sacrificing the interests of individual patients. This model is often contrasted with the contract model, which focuses on the relationship between the physician and the patient.

Utilitarianism is a moral philosophy that focuses on the overall good of the community. It is based on the idea that the right action is the one that produces the greatest good for the greatest number of people. In the context of medicine, utilitarianism would suggest that a physician should act in a way that maximizes the overall health and well-being of the community, even if it means sacrificing the interests of individual patients. This model is often contrasted with the contract model, which focuses on the relationship between the physician and the patient.